Noted Psychiatrist Wrote On Many Forms Of Neurosis

Dr. Edmund Bergler, noted psychiatrist and psychoanalyst, died in New York at Mount Sinai Hospital at the age of 62 years. He lived at 251 Central Park West. Dr. Bergler's reputation as a psychiatric theoretician was based partly on his concept that there is but one basic neurosis, which has its origin in the fantasies of early childhood, says the New York Times. All major neurotic troubles can be traced to the misconceptions of infant days and allied forms of psychic masochism, according to the ideas expressed in his books.

Dr. Bergler studied and wrote in detail on many forms of neurosis. In one of his books, "Conflict in Marriage" (1949), he wrote that "Divorce, in most instances, is no solution at all, but only the admission of helplessness to master an inner conflict. You can divorce your mate, but you cannot divorce your neurosis."

In 1950, his "The Writer and Psychoanalysis" was published by Doubleday. In it Dr. Bergler described a new concept of the creative-writing process. Convinced of the neurotic tendencies of all writers, he went into detail concerning his clinical experiences with thirty-six writers, and the strange manifestation known as "Writer's Block."

Freud, in 1928, said that "psychoanalysis must lay down its arms before the problem of the artist," but Dr. Bergler declared confidently that "the writer does not produce his works—as the naive assume—because he has something important to convey to his listeners, but solely to solve an inner conflict."

Going far beyond the Oedipus phase, into the warring of child and mother in the first years of life, he described how this basic conflict might be resolved by the adult writer through sublimation. "He writes to furnish inner alibis to his tormenting inner conscience," he said.

Dr. Bergler reported the possibility of a cure for homosexuality, and dealt with this subject and with "pseudosexuality," frigidity, impotence, and related topics in "Neurotic Counterfeit," published in 1951. In another book he challenged the conclusions of Dr. Alfred C. Kinsey in the field of sex.

"The Psychology of Gambling" (1957); "The Revolt of the Middle-Aged Man" (1954); "Laughter and the Sense of Humor" (1956); "Tensions Can Be Reduced in Nuisances" (1960); "Money and Emotional Conflicts" (1959); and "Curable and Incurable Neurotics" (1961) were among his other recent works.

Dr. Bergler was a graduate of the University of Vienna, where he received an M. D. in 1926, says the New York Times. He belonged to the American Psychoanalytic Association, the American Association for Research in Psychosomatic Problems, the Society for Psychopathology and Psychotherapy, and the New York Psychoanalytic Society.

His widow, Mrs. Marianne Blumberger Bergler, is his only immediate survivor.

Two Brothers Give $One Million To Set Up Hebrew Culture Foundation

The establishment of the Tarbuth Foundation (Foundation for Hebrew Culture) to promote every phase of the Hebrew language, literature, and education was made possible through an initial grant of $1,000,000 by Abraham Goodman and his brother Jacob, New York industrialists. They are lifelong Zionists.

Abraham Goodman is chairman of the board of directors of the Foster-Grant Company, Inc., plastic manufacturers, and heads several other concerns, says the New York Times. Jacob Goodman is affiliated with his brother's industrial enterprises.

Details of the project, recently incorporated in New York, were outlined by Dr. Emanuel Neumann, acting chairman, at a luncheon-meeting at the Delmonico Hotel. The Foundation's headquarters are at 515 Park Avenue. Dr. Neumann said that, in accordance with the wishes of the Goodman brothers, $750,000 would be earmarked for establishing in New York an accredited, degree-granting college of Hebrew studies "as a national institution on a nondenominational basis."

In this connection, Dr. Neumann, a leader in the American Zionist movement, observed that the Herzliah Hebrew Teachers' Training Institute, established forty years ago, "could be developed into a duly accredited college."

The remaining $250,000 of the Goodman grant will be available for other purposes, which include: Granting scholarships for students who want to become qualified teachers to relieve the shortage of Hebrew teachers; in-service training for Hebrew teachers to "deepen their knowledge and enhance their competence." Developing a program for promoting Hebrew education among children, adolescents, and adults "by cooperating with existing summer camps and institutes and by establishing new Hebrew camps." Publishing of books and periodicals in Hebrew for youth.

Dr. Neumann said the Foundation would cooperate with other agencies to "bring about a better climate of opinion for assigning a more prominent place to the Hebrew language and literature in the curriculum of all Jewish schools."

The Foundation is not intended to be another organization with thousands of members, conducting public campaigns, but it is ready to receive gifts, donations, and bequests for purposes within its program, he explained. "It will pursue its objectives independently, with a view to the best interest of the Jewish community as a whole, and without any political or denominational alignment."

On this point Dr. Neumann stressed that the Foundation would cooperate in the promotion of every phase of Hebrew culture, says the New York Times. In a message to Dr. Neumann, Premier David Ben-Gurion of Israel said: "The Hebrew language binds us together not only with all generations of the past, but also with all the Jewish communities of the world—above all with Israel."

Village Built In Time Of Abraham Found In Israel

A huge store of millstones from some past era was discovered deep in an uninhabited ravine in the Negev Desert. There are nearly a hundred of them, of hard, gray granite, measuring mostly about fifteen inches across the grinding surface.

They lie scattered over the barren surface of Wadi Rodedi, the dry bed of rainy-season torrents, about midway between Timna, where King Solomon built a large copper smelter, says the New York Times, and Eleth, Israel's port on the Gulf of Aqaba.

The millstones were found by Dr. Nelson Glueck, an archaeologist and president of Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Cincinnati. He has been making an archaeological survey of the Negev for the last nine years.

From a single fragment of green-glazed pottery, found at the site, Dr. Glueck has tentatively identified the millstones as the work of medieval Arabs or perhaps Crusaders.

But Dr. Glueck added that the fragment could have been dropped there when the millstones were already old. He intends to continue his investigations of the site this year.

The granite millstones are much too hard, the archaeologist said, to have been used to grind only wheat or salt from some near-by production. Neither are there any indications of a former agriculture, or of a large, permanent settlement near the Wadi.

There are the remains of a rude house with the millstones so arranged that they might have been used for grinding. But Dr. Glueck thought it more likely that the millstones had been used with other rocks in the foundation of the house.

There are stones lying about that appear to have been broken in manufacture. One such broken stone was used in the lining of a near-by grave, says the New York Times. Gray granite is plentiful there and it would seem that the site was an ancient millstone quarry. As far as Dr. Glueck could recall, until now only basalt millstones were known to have been produced in the Palestine area.

In his search of the Negev, a project he has undertaken for the David W. Klau Foundation, Dr. Glueck also found an unusually well-preserved village, the date of which he placed in the time of Abraham, or about 2000 B. C.

The village, with the remains of the foundations of about fifty circular or oval stone houses, was spread over the slopes of the hills overlooking Bir Geshur. Dr. Glueck said he had found a wealth of pottery fragments by which to date the village.

With an Israeli Army escort, Dr. Glueck revisited a deep spring he found two years ago, at Ain Mugharah, on the border between Israel and the Sinai Peninsula of Egypt.

Then, he ventured to stay only very briefly at the spring. This time, he said, he felt he could dwell there as long as he liked, for the army has built a road along the frontier past the spring, says the New York Times. Dr. Glueck found numerous fragments from Abrahamitic sites in the vicinity.

U.S. Expert Cited Soviet Anti-Semitism To United Nations Probe

When the United States expert on a United Nations body investigating anti-Semitism and other forms of intolerance recently raised the question of anti-Jewish activities in the Soviet Union, it was the first time the treatment of Soviet Jewry had come up for consideration in the international forum, writes Martin G. Berck, in the New York Herald Tribune. Col. John M. Raymond, representing the United States on the U. N.'s Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination cited these charges in documents before the agency:

That Soviet Jewry "has consistently been deprived of minimal spiritual and cultural privileges permitted other minorities."

That there is a "consistent pattern of scurrilous press attacks in recent years against Jews."

That synagogues and other Jewish property have been seriously damaged.

That Jews gathered in prayer have been beaten up;

And that "it would appear no effective action was taken by the government to correct the situation."

Col. Raymond suggested that the fourteen-member subcommission receive any further evidence pointing to discrimination in the Soviet Union and then decide how to deal with it.

V. I. Sapozhnikov, Soviet expert on the agency, speaking earlier, denied there was any racial or religious discrimination in the Soviet Union. He accused American Zionist organizations of having "crudely slandered" his country by charging anti-Semitism.

Sir Basil Henriques Devoted Life To Jewry, And Youth Of East London

Sir Basil Henriques, seventy-one, who for nineteen years judged juvenile delinquents in London's seamy East End, and who died of a heart attack recently, was known to hundreds of Cockneys who passed before him at East London Juvenile Court as "The Gaffer" (The Boss), says the New York Times. Sir Basil had been active in youth club work and was deputy chairman of the National Association of Boys' Clubs.

He was a member of one of England's oldest and wealthiest Jewish families. After retiring from the bench after thirty-two years as a magistrate in 1955, he became one of the nation's outstanding authorities on youth problems.

Sir Basil's father was for forty-four years on the committee of a large Jewish orphanage in South London. His mother, a descendant of the philanthropist Sir Moses Montefiore, was chairman of the management of a "lodging house for respectable girls" and also had an interest in a home for Jewish unmarried mothers.

Sir Basil served his apprenticeship at the Oxford and Bermondsey Mission. Following his father's death in 1912, he determined to devote his life to work among the Jews of East London, many of whom were refugees from Europe living in great poverty.

In 1914 he founded the Oxford and St. George's Club for Jewish Boys at Stepney. The following year he founded a Girls' Club. This was placed under the management of Miss Rose Loewe, who two years later became his wife. Between them, the Henriques built up what became the famous Bernhard Baron Settlement.

Sir Basil was educated at Harrow, and spent a year in France before going on to University College, Oxford. He became secretary of the Oxford Synagogue while still an undergraduate.

In World War I, he served with distinction first in the East Kent Regiment and later in the Tank Corps, commanding what was said to have been the first tank to open fire on the enemy, says the New York Times. He was appointed Justice of the Peace in 1924, and the same year became magistrate in the East London Juvenile Court. He became chairman of the court in 1937.

Sir Basil was vice-chairman of the National Association of Boys Club, vice-president of the World Union for Progressive Judaism, and president of the British Diabetic Association.

He received the Cross of the British Empire in 1948 and was knighted in the Birthday Honours List in January, 1955.

He was the author of "The Home-Menders," which was regarded as an authoritative work on juvenile delinquency. It discussed the causes of delinquency and recommended establishment of a ministry responsible for the welfare of all children up to the age of seventeen.

Sir Basil visited the United States three times. In 1926 he lectured at universities and at Carnegie Hall under the auspices of Dr. Stephen Wise, and in 1942, he made an extensive speaking tour of the country. His last visit was in 1956, after his retirement.

On that occasion, he said in an interview with the New York Times, that juvenile delinquency in America was "alarming," that television was the "pernicious poison" of America; and that American children were undisciplined "both at school and, at home."

The Legacy Of Chaim Lenski, Modern Hebrew Poet Of Lithuania

BY ITZHAK IVRY, OF THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION AND CULTURE, OF THE AMERICAN ZIONIST COUNCIL

(This is one of a continuing series of periodic reviews of both recent significant Israeli literature and essays on leading Hebrew literary personalities. These articles are designed to foster an acquaintance with modern Hebraica on the part of the English cultured reader.)

Chaim Lenski was a most unusual figure in the family of modern Hebrew poets, and his life story was tragic. Even the fate of his manuscripts was unusual and tragic. His voice reached beyond the grave twenty years after his disappearance and untimely death. As a matter of fact, even his death has not been established beyond the shadow of a doubt, and the last man to meet him in Siberia in a forced labor camp, in the summer of 1942, only supposes that Lenski died of hunger, because on his return from work in the fields he did not find Lenski among the living, while the number of people who fell from hunger in those days was legion.

And so, the Jewish-Polish refugee who saw Lenski alive assumed that Lenski perished from hunger. The refugee at that time did not know Hebrew. Now he is in Israel and has mastered the Hebrew language, but he still remembers Chaim Lenski, a slight, bent figure of a man, standing working in the field beside him and suddenly stopping work to recite a Hebrew poem from memory. The words were a riddle to the refugee, but the sight was unique and unforgettable. And so were the circumstances of Lenski's life until his last breath.

Born in Polish Lithuania in the town of Slonim, in 1905, he learned early the tragedy of a broken home. His parents were divorced before he was old enough to speak, and his grandfather, in a nearby townlet, Dereczyn, took him into his home. The grandfather was a woodcutter and water-carrier and struggled for a livelihood, yet for the grandchild he hired the best teacher he know to implant in him, very early in life, a deep and abiding love for the Bible.

At the age of twelve Lenski wrote his first poem. As a lad of sixteen he lost his grandparents. One year later he arrived at Vilno to study at the Hebrew Teachers' Seminary. His two-year stay in Vilno was not a happy one as he did not adjust successfully to school life. In the autumn of 1924 he received a letter from his father inviting him to Baku, the Soviet oil town, where his father was serving as an engineer. Lenski decided to steal across the border. The reasons for this are unclear; some say that an unhappy love affair made him decide to leave the country, others speculate that the charm of the first years of the Russian Revolution attracted him.

As soon as he crossed the border his troubles began. He was held in quarantine and sent to Samara. He then escaped to Tsaritsin, and by the end of February, 1924, he at last arrived in Baku. But the reunion with his father was unhappy and of a short duration and very soon the conflicts between them began to mount. By the end of 1925 he travelled to Moscow and from there to Leningrad where he joined a pioneering cooperative, Amal. He worked in a factory as an unskilled laborer and sent Hebrew poems to Palestine where they were printed in Ktuvim, Moznaim and Gilyonot.

A Hebrew poet in Soviet Russia has always been a rarity, even in the first years after the Revolution when limited tolerance was still the line of treatment on the part of Soviet authorities. After all, not so long ago Habimah, the Hebrew theatre, was still a state theatre. In those years of the early twenties there were even attempts to publish a few volumes of Hebrew poems and prose in Charkov (1922), in Kiev (1923), and in Moscow (1926). None of them had lasting literary significance, but they were characteristic of the tendency of young Hebrew writers and poets to make an attempt to adjust to the new environment. Very soon they were given to understand in unmistakable terms that they were unwanted, and that the language to which they had chosen to remain true was officially considered a "dead" one and branded as "reactionary". The isolation of the few Hebrew-speaking and writing youths was so great that they did not even know about each other's existence. In a letter to a friend in Palestine, Lenski said that the editor of Gilyonot, Itzhak Lamdan, sent him in Leningrad the title page of Gilyonot One, and in the table of contents he found the name of another Hebrew poet, Elisha Rudin. And Lenski said: "Do you know this poet? He lives in Moscow, and wrote in Yiddish at one time."

When the arrests of the Hehalutz members began Lenski was among the suspects. At the GPU headquarters in Leningrad, he succeeded in convincing his investigators that he was an anarchist. "And when will you establish a Zionist anarchist organization?" "As soon as I come around to it, I will let you know," Lenski answered nonchalantly. He impressed them as an innocuous crank and was released forthwith.

Lenski's humor never left him in the most difficult situations, but more and more he yearned to leave

Warns Judaism Cannot Survive On Philanthropy Alone

American Jews were warned by a leading Reform rabbi that despite "the fantastic sums of money they are pouring into Jewish philanthropic causes, they are not making a significant contribution to the survival of Judaism as a religious civilization". Rabbi Roland B. Gittelsohn, of Temple Israel, in Boston, Mass., sounded this warning in a keynote address during the drive for American Reform Judaism.

Addressing 450 synagogue leaders Rabbi Gittelsohn expressed "wonderment at the fantastic sums of money American Jews are eager to contribute to philanthropy and to our so-called Jewish defense organizations while eking out pitifully meager sums for the Combined Campaign and other drives representing our religious institutions and needs."

Rabbi Gittelsohn asked American Jews not to misunderstand him. "Both philanthropy and self-defense are consistent with the highest traditions of Judaism and are necessary in our present-day world," he declared. "But those who are concerned about Jewish survival need new insights and new priorities," he emphasized. "Judaism will not survive on the basis merely of philanthropy, no matter how great it is. Individual Jews will be kept alive but their loyalty and attachment to Judaism as a religious civilization requires far more than this. Nor, will Judaism survive merely through the efforts of our defense organizations. The type of Jewish identification which hinges on frantic and sometimes hysterical efforts to defend ourselves is like the type of religion which flourished during World War II. It was a spurious religion which sprouted under the impetus of fear, but as soon as the fear had vanished religion, too, proved to be a weed that withered."

"The survival of Judaism," the rabbi stressed, "depends upon synagogues, religious schools, congregational associations, and rabbinical seminaries. It depends upon generations of Jews who will be helped toward a commitment to Judaism and the Jewish way of life. It depends upon institutions like the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Hebrew Union College. Unless we support all of these with the utmost generosity, the philanthropic causes and self-defense agencies some of us have supported so lavishly will soon themselves diminish and disappear."

U. S. EXPERT CITED SOVIET ANTI-SEMITISM TO U.N. PROBE

Their purpose, he said, was a political one — to dispel the impression created by the fact that most of the incidents involved in the swastika-painting epidemic of a year ago occurred in the West.

Pointing out that anti-Semitism was only one aspect of race prejudice, Mr. Sapozhnikov referred to segregationist policies being pursued in Africa and elsewhere, and said the subcommission should make recommendations aimed at eradicating all racial and religious prejudice.

For this professed purpose, Mr. Sapozhnikov submitted a draft resolution that would, in its essential points, call upon all governments "to rescind discriminatory racial laws wherever they exist" and "to adopt legislation, wherever it is not yet in existence, prohibiting such discrimination."

The resolution was seen by some observers as a device to divert the subcommission's attention from the treatment of Soviet Jewry to the subject of which countries have the best anti-bias laws, says the New York Herald Tribune. There are Soviet legal guarantees providing complete religious and cultural equality for all citizens, but critics say these are not observed in the case of Jews.

The subcommission's task, assigned by its parent body, the Commission on Human Rights, is to recommend action and evaluate materials received from governments and non-governmental organizations. The materials were solicited in connection with the swastika episode, which began on Christmas Eve, 1959, with the desecration of a synagogue in Cologne, West Germany, touching off hundreds of anti-Jewish manifestations throughout the world during the following months.

Mr. Sapozhnikov said the incidents demonstrate that a number of neo-Nazi organizations are active in West Germany. The development of Nazism there, he said, is abetted by cold-war developments and the rise of former Nazis to places in the West German administration.

Franz Matsch, of Austria, and C. Richard Hiscocks noted that many of the swastika-painting incidents had been committed by juveniles and should not be taken too seriously, except that they point to the importance of properly educating the rising generation.

Mr. Raymond observed that neo-Nazi organizations were potentially dangerous, says the New York Herald Tribune but there was no evidence to indicate that the swastika outburst had been centrally directed or internationally organized.

Molly Picon's MISH-MASH

Second Avenue is more than just the name of a street. Anyone familiar with Show Business knows it's the Broadway of the Yiddish theatre. But Second Avenue doesn't end on Manhattan's lower east side. It crosses the ocean, and extends all the way to Africa. You'll see what I mean when you read this story.

I was touring Africa with what we call in the profession a one-woman show. You have no idea what the word "distance" means until you go city hopping in Africa. Very often we would travel thirty-six hours and see nothing but veldt and sun parched mountains. I was really appreciative, even a little guilty, when people told me about their long journeys to the theatre. So after my show in Kimberly, I persuaded my husband to come out and make a curtain speech. It went something like this: "Because of your wonderful reception, and because it's so hard for you to come to see us, Molly says she will be glad to perform any place in Africa where there's a Jewish community, no matter how small, as long as they want her."

That night, Yonkel and I were waiting on the station platform for our train to Durban. A little elderly couple approached us rather timidly. To put them at ease, Yonkel gave them a warm hello. That started the man off. "Mister Kalich", he said, "you can't imagine how much we enjoyed hearing Molly sing. You said you would come to any town that had a Jewish community. We'd like to ask you to come to our town. We live three hundred miles from here, and while our Jewish community isn't as large as Kimberly's, we know they'd be thrilled to have an artist like Molly Picon visit them." This was music to our ears. "Of course we'll come", I assured him. "Tell, me how big is your Jewish community?" And the man answered, "Me and my wife".

That was probably the one Jewish community in the world that wasn't divided into Orthodox and Reform. And probably one of the very few that couldn't find Rokeach Gefilte Fish at the local grocer's. Here in the big city things are different. No matter where you live, you're never far from a jar of that wonderful Rokeach whitefish—pike Gefilte Fish. It's premium gefilte fish, made from whitefish, pike, eggs, matzo meal . . . better ingredients you couldn't buy yourself. And of course that delicious redi-jelled broth that only Rokeach has. Serve some tonight, and if you're planning a trip to Africa, take a few jars along with you. After all, you wouldn't want to go around the veldt in 80 days without Rokeach Gefilte Fish!

for Palestine. He wrote to his editors and friends, "Please take me out of here. If my poems are not good, I am prepared to work with my ten fingers." He had a premonition that very soon he would be arrested and sent to Siberia.

Chaim Nachman Bialik became interested in Lenski's fate and made an effort to obtain the necessary papers. Meanwhile, Lenski was arrested. After months in prison Lenski was sent, together with many other political prisoners, to Marinsk in Siberia. This was at the beginning of 1935. Lenski's only crime was being a Hebrew poet.

He was sentenced to five years in a labor camp, and while in Marinsk he was convinced that sooner or later they would free him. He even wrote a letter to the famous novelist, Maxim Gorki, asking him to intervene with the authorities on his behalf. He wrote to Gorki, "As a poet who admires your writings and the humanistic spirit with which they are permeated, I appeal to you to intervene. I am a poet, and my only crime for which I was sentenced to five years in a prison camp is that I write in the Hebrew language, the language of the Bible and the language of Bialik, whom you defined in your speech at the first Writers' Convention in Moscow (1934) as 'a poet, almost a genius'. You may ask me, Alexei Maximovitch, why I signed certain documents admitting that I committed certain imaginary crimes as formulated by my investigators. True, I signed them because I am a poet and cannot live without expressing my feelings and ideas. They denied me any possibility of writing; they isolated me, and I could not overcome the stream of poetry which was overwhelming me. I desperately needed a pencil and paper. They promised me pencil and paper if I would sign the protocol. First I declined, then I could not withstand the temptation. This is the secret of my admission, which is untrue, nul and void, as can be easily proven if my case is reconsidered. As a Hebrew poet and an innocent human being, I therefore ask you, Alexei Maximovitch, to intervene on my behalf and to recommend that the Attorney general reconsider my case."

An inmate of the camp, who memorized the contents of this letter, marveled at Lenski's naiveté in believing that his letter would even reach the celebrated Maxim Gorki, and at the elemental force of poetic vision and inspiration which could have prompted a man as brave and stubborn as Lenski to sign an admission of guilt in order to obtain from his torturers one thing, the momentary freedom to write down his Hebrew poems.

This inmate lived to tell the story, and reached Israel years later. He heard that Lenski was transferred in the spring of 1936 to another camp near the Soviet-Mongolian border where the camp inmates worked at building a strategic railroad. Lenski stayed there until his five-year term was completed. In 1939 Lenski obtained a permit to settle in Leningrad. He became deeply religious, and when World War II broke out he volunteered in the army to fight against the Nazis, but he was rejected as physically unfit.

From that moment on news on Lenski was very scant. It seems that during 1940-41 Lenski was exiled from Leningrad to the Malaya Vishera camp as a Zionist suspect or a disloyal citizen. Malaya Vishera is in the mountainous region on the border of Kazakhstan, and conditions in camps in that area were especially severe.

The last person known to have seen Lenski alive was the above-mentioned Polish-Jewish refugee who met Lenski in the Kanst forced labor camp in Siberia in the summer of 1942, where the daily ration of food was 600 grams of bread and three portions of watery soup. The inmates died by the score, mostly from malnutrition and hunger. Thus ended in Siberia fifteen years of the tortured life of the last Lithuanian Hebrew poet, death coming to him at the age of thirty-seven.

More than twenty years later a small bundle of manuscripts reached Israel from the USSR. It contained Chaim Lenski's poetic legacy. An anonymous friend or relative kept this treasure through all the bitter years of World War II and the Nazi holocaust, and when the right time came he sent it to the country where the language of Lenski's muse was alive and free. The date, October 4, 1940, was marked on the manuscripts, apparently by the anonymous trustee.

Evidently Lenski used his short stay in Leningrad to make sure that his poems would be kept in a safe place. In school-children's copybooks Lenski wrote down 196 poems, of which 131 were never published. There were several variations and new rhymes in the 65 poems which were previously published. All the poems were written in Soviet Russia between 1925 and 1940. The last of the poems in the manuscript is devoted to his greatest love, the Hebrew language, and is named "Ancient Tongue". It reads, in free translation:

"Ancient tongue, tongue of Heman and Halevi,
Miracle-like you have reached me, you tender one . . .

"From the shores of Jordan and Euphrates you moved your legions,
You appointed me commander and to you, Queen, an adjutant.
Your letters stood in a row at attention,
Like Assyrian heroes with beards square.

"Queen! I led your armies as general

Across the Don Neva and Nieman, river of my land of birth,
So may you carry my name beyond the Lethe River
As the names of the ancients, Heman and Halevi."

The first collection of Lenski's poems appeared in Eretz Israel in 1939. It was published by Davar. In 1954 Mossad Bialik published a volume of poetry, letters, and essays by the two Soviet poets, Chaim Lenski and Elisha Rudin. It was called "The Truncated Branch", alluding to the Russian branch which was severed from the Hebrew tree of the Jewish people. In 1960 the Histadruth Publishing House, Am Oved, issued a complete collection of Chaim Lenski's verse, entitled, "Beyond The Lethe River", comprising all the earlier poems and the poems contained in the manuscripts which reached Israel in 1959.

Lithuania's last Hebrew poet is essentially a lyricist. In the prison of Leningrad and in the Siberian labor camps he relived the years of his youth and he sings the song of the "shtetl" (town) in its last period of existence between World War I and World War II. Having left the landscape of his childhood and being fully aware of the bitter truth that the past cannot be revived, he clings with deep affection to his world of the past and remembers lovingly the flame of the Sabbath candles and the holiness and grace of God-fearing ancestors. Poverty and suffering cannot dispel the charm of this "world of nobility".

Moreover, in the Siberian tundra a deep yearning for the Lithuanian landscape is aroused in him. Some of his most lyrical poems speak of Lithuania as "my land" and often he call this country "fatherland" and quotes the famous motto of Mickiewicz, "Lithuania, my fatherland, you are like health . . ." And as the famous Adam Mickiewicz on the streets of Paris does, so does the last Hebrew poet of Lithuania, on the streets of Leningrad which he symbolically names 'Petropolis', suffer the pangs of the exiled son who feels that he will never again see his beloved rivers, woods, and skies.

In his Leningrad poems Lenski puts in juxtaposition the bronze monument of Peter the Great, a symbol of tyranny and rule by terror and suppression of the masses, and the river Neva, a symbol of the forces of the Russian people which may one day arise and break all dams and overflood the fortifications of the tyrants. For Lenski Leningrad is also a symbol of the chains of industrial slavery and of the cruel victory of Metropolis — Petropolis in the struggle between big city and rural life. In one of his poems, written in prison, Lenski says to his torturers:

"You're many, I'm alone,
You have rifles, I only a pen.
Shout Hurray! I'm vanquished,
And truly, truly so, I'm vanquished."

The poet then warns his captors that he is still alive and his pen is as sharp as before; he warns them to be ready for the day of retribution, but his retribution is not a vicious one, it is highly magnanimous. For, he says, his pen cannot imprison; it can only open doors and boundless spaces. On left and right, continents and seas will be open to them, but there will be no escape from the eternal damnation voiced by the cranes of Ibicus: detestation to the murderers forever!

Lenski, the poet dreamer, is also a realist with a keen, observant eye and with a sense for history. In one of his first poems he states, in sad resignation:

"The house is desolate, the house is empty,
And who ever wandered away will not return."

Indeed, from his first step on the Eastern side of the Soviet side of the border Lenski saw that he was travelling the road of no return. He clung with stubbornness and supreme devotion to the language of his muses and in his central poem, "Lithuania", he beautified the land of his childhood and sang "a hymn to the living, to nature, and a memorial to those who rest in the sand."

It is an irony of fate that Lenski, a worker, the son and grandson of working men, had to go through hell in the land of the October Revolution, and rot away almost half the years of his short life in prisons and concentration camps, not being a political or party man at all, for only one crime, that of being a poet-individualist who thought and felt in the Hebrew language and who would not compromise or give up the life's passion he held for Hebrew poetry and for freedom.

In his poems he wonderfully mastered the Hebrew language despite the fact that he was for so many years far removed from any center of Hebrew learning or of living, spoken Hebrew. His contacts with the world of Hebrew poetry were maintained by mail, and he succeeded in maintaining them until 1937. From prison and camps he sent his poems to his wife in Leningrad who, in turn, transmitted them to Palestine, and each printed Hebrew word that reached him in the far North brought him untold joy.

Basically he was a fatalist and looked with courage and equanimity to the approaching end. But at the same time he was imbued with a prophetic sense of justice and he warned the evil-doers:

"Day of God! This is the day,
The day of ruin and of wrath.
It comes frightening. Woe to you!
You, the sons of the last generation."

He had no doubts about his poetic mission and he was sure of the blessing of a great, natural, lyric talent. He did not give up his verse to the very last breath, under the "high, blue Siberian skies." He felt the wings of immortality beating around him and no cruelty of man or nature could break his spirit. He died a hero's death, a free man among slaves, without ever admitting to himself or others that he was a hero, indeed in a generation in which heroism was to become a collective term for material achievements. By his living poems he has conclusively proven to his captors that his covenant with the "ancient queen", the beloved tongue of the prophets, will live forever.

The Trees Grow In Israel To Bring The Land To Life

By restoring trees to barren land, Israel is restoring life. Primitive man was born into a world of wood and water, forest and ocean. All primitive man knew was the world of trees. He lived among his trees, loved them and sometimes even worshipped them as gods. He endowed them with both protective and evil powers. Genesis describes the tree of life in the Garden of Eden as the fruit whereof comes eternal life. And it is the apple of the Tree of Knowledge which drove Adam and Eve from Paradise. Man has always believed that trees possess souls. Aristotle and Plutarch credited trees with perception, passion, and reason. In Colonial America, an elm on Boston Common earned the name of "The Tree of Liberty".

In the United States, however, pioneers had to clear trees in order to build their homes. In Israel, for the first time, forests were not cut away to push back the frontiers and build a country. On the contrary, the Jewish pioneers had to heal the land's parched soil. In Israel forests were planted to expand her borders from within, thus making the young land more secure.

By 1948, when the State of Israel was proclaimed, the Jewish National Fund had planted 5,000,000 trees. In the first thirteen years of Israel's existence as an independent state 45,000,000 additional trees have been planted; and hundreds of thousands of acres of arid land in the hill areas and the Negev desert have been reclaimed. The new science of forestry has taught Israel that trees prevent erosion, raise the level of underground water, create new soil, re-invigorate the earth and air, anchor shifting sand dunes, act as windbreaks protecting your crops, beautify the land, supply valuable timber, facilitate the establishment of health and vacation resorts, and provide work for the newcomers.

How did Israel's vast afforestation program come about? How were the ever greener hills of Judea and Galilee, and the blossoming northern desert returned from the neglected land? This program was carried out by the Jewish National Fund.

Founded in 1901, its purpose was to acquire and develop land in Palestine and prepare it for settlement. The first recorded JNF planting took place in 1910, when the Herzl Olive Forest was laid out at Ben Shemen. It took ten years to discover that olive trees could not thrive in that part of the country. The high rocky ground required hardier trees, pines, acacias, casuarinas. But even then the problem was not solved. A hill in Judea was planted with saplings of the stone pine imported from Lebanon where it flourished of similar structure and composition. But it did not flourish in Judea and two years later perished. Experiment led to the Jerusalem pine which has become the mainstay of Israel's afforestation.

The Balfour Forest near Ginegar, planted in 1924, was the Jewish National Fund's first major afforestation project. The forestry program became even more important after 1948, when independence brought to Israel a stream of survivors of Nazi concentration camps, for whom homes and work had to be found. In eighteen months Israel's population increased forty per cent. A chain of pioneer settlements was built near the sites of future forests. In addition to planting and maintaining the forests, the new pioneers broke ground for their own farms. Their earnings as foresters helped to tide them over until their land began to yield crops. Soon they were joined by new settlers from the Middle East, notably Yemen and North Africa. They too helped plant new forests. In thirteen brief years (1948-61) Israel has created a new agriculture in a man-made desert.

The Festival of Tu Bishvat, the New Year of Trees, celebrated all over Israel, combines the physical and spiritual aspects of Israel's regeneration. On that day, the child in Jerusalem, and the child in the kibbutz, and the Jewish child in the Diaspora, join to celebrate the beginning of still another life-cycle as winter gives way to flowering spring. It is a day devoted to remembrance of a renewed awareness of the significance of Israel's new forests, their practical value, their beauty, their climatic, and even their spiritual, influence upon the land and the people.

It is a time for planting as thousands of school children place tender saplings into the earth. It marks the return of the native, and symbolizes the intimate communion between the modern Israeli and the soil. It is an annual demonstration in vivid and dramatic terms of the true meaning of the Jewish National Fund: to bring the land to life, and life to the land.

Seek Witnesses Against Nazis In Massacre Of Polish Jewry

The Austrian authorities have requested the help of the World Jewish Congress in New York in an investigation connected with the wholesale massacre of the major part of Polish Jewry, almost 3,000,000 of whom died under Hitler. The investigation has been touched off by the recent arrest in Salzburg, Austria, of SS-Captain Herman Hoefle. He was Chief-of-Staff to an Austrian, Odilo Globocnik, who master-minded "Operation Reinhard," the Nazi program for the massacre and pillaging of Polish Jewry.

Globocnik is reported to have committed suicide in 1945. Hoefle, the principal assistant of Globocnik, and other staff officers are now undergoing an investigation in connection with which the World Jewish Congress has been asked to provide witnesses. Globocnik, Hoefle, and their fellow-Nazis implemented what they cynically called, in German, an "ex-settlement" (Aussiedelung) plan which, in effect, forcibly moved the Jews in the then Government-General of Poland from the ghettos and villages to the gas chambers between March, 1942, and September, 1943. Hoefle was, in particular, active as the "Ex-settlement Commissioner" in Warsaw.

Hoefle managed to escape justice for years due in part to confusion between his name and that of another Nazi, Hans Hoefle, who was hanged in Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, for his activities as a high Nazi police official in Slovakia. The others, all Austrians, against whom evidence is sought, are: Hans Bohunsky, Franz Hoedl, Reinhold von Mohrenschildt, Rudolf Schleissner, Franz Eigner, Ernst Lersch, Alois Rzepa.

Anyone who has any knowledge of the crimes committed by Hoefle and his aides is asked to inform Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, director, Institute of Jewish Affairs, World Jewish Congress, 15 East 84th Street, New York 28, N. Y.

During "Operation Reinhard" Globocnik, to whom the task of wiping out Polish Jewry was entrusted, with Hoefle's help, emptied the ghettos and sent the inmates to such infamous death camps as Belzec, Sobibor, Treblinka, Chelmno, etc. The pace with which Globocnik put the operation into effect was dictated by his fear that events might occur which would require a stoppage before he had wiped out Polish Jewry. When the grim episode ended, Hans Frank, German Governor-General of Poland, reported on August 2, 1943, that of the 3,500,000 Polish Jews, which, he claimed, was the total at the outset of German occupation, only a few labor companies remained, adding, "the rest have, so to say, emigrated."

you do not have to

All services rendered by officers of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration are free.

You need pay money to no one to bring an application to the attention of the Immigration authorities.

It has happened in the past that unscrupulous persons have taken advantage of the lack of knowledge of English or French on the part of newcomers to charge exorbitant fees for services which may be obtained free of charge at the immigration office.

Any document required to support an application may be submitted in the language in which it is written.

Similarly, if an interpreter is required to enable a person to discuss an immigration matter, such services are supplied free by the immigration authorities.

The Department of Citizenship and Immigration is anxious to assist immigrants in every way. This includes protecting them against exploitation.

Brights FINE CANADIAN Wines
SINCE 1874

At your sabbath table, a decanter of wine is as much at home as a challah.

No wine is more welcome in Jewish homes in Canada than Mazel Tov, a wine made from Concord grapes grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov is ruby red in colour, and richly sweet—but not cloying—to the taste. It's a wine you'll "remember", the kind of wine that you used to taste many years ago.

Mazel Tov, made 'Kosher P'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year for every 'simcha'.

Prejudice Feeds On Prejudice, Brotherhood Nourishes Brotherhood

Race Relations Statement of the Committee On Justice And Peace Of The Central Conference Of American Rabbis

Judaism is committed to the principle of the equality of all men under God. Not alone is this our noblest religious contribution, but it is the very basis of our American heritage. Motivated, therefore, by our Jewish background and teaching, and ever mindful of Israel's persecution and disability throughout the ages, we Jews are sensitive to the suffering of all victims of injustice and exploitation.

A century has passed since the Civil War with its great loss of life, property, and national morale was fought to preserve the Union and to abolish the institution of slavery. Yet much remains to be desired on the American scene. Despite the Negro's commendable record in war and peace, we continue to subject him to extreme humiliation because of his "race, color and previous condition of servitude."

Racial segregation is not confined to any one section of the country. The moral challenge of equality exists in every community, in varying forms and intensity. Integration is on trial in the North no less than in the South. Furthermore, the race situation is not national, but international. All of us realize that the overwhelming population of the world is colored. In recent years, with the encouragement of America and the approval of the United Nations, many new countries on African soil have declared their sovereign independence. With pride we note that little Israel, herself a fledgling democracy, has set up its own Marshall Plan, to encourage with technical aid and resources, these newly-developed governments.

America loses status abroad, because of discrimination against the Negro at home. How can we exert a moral leadership and influence in the world when racial minorities in our own land experience political, economic, and social discrimination? Segregation confronts us as individuals, and as a nation, with a moral dilemma. On the one hand there is the fear of change. On the other we face the danger of ignoring those ethical principles which are the very basis upon which our democracy is founded.

In reflecting upon the failures and conflicts which plague America, we may forget our aspirations and accomplishments. It were well for us to evaluate them properly.

We recommend the work of the Southern Regional Council and the many State and City Councils on Human Relations committed to improving relations between the races. We applaud the Dallas Citizens Council, which has carefully prepared the way for complete integration of its Negro citizens. Atlanta and Louisville, to mention only two cities, have demonstrated what can be done in the orderly transition of school integration, lunch-room seating, and bus transportation facilities.

More and more citizens of both races have manifested a sense of justice, of personal responsibility, of generosity of spirit, and the belief that man, made in the image of God, is essentially good. These leaders have been quick to condemn violence, and to emphasize the importance of law and order. Prejudice feeds on prejudice, whereas brotherhood nourishes brotherhood. Hate is forever a corrosive.

So vast is the area of civil rights that one scarcely knows how to approach the total problem. For the individual, there is the matter of the franchise. Many sections of the country deprive a segment of their population of the right to vote. In this, America betrays its trust and fails in its full duty. In addition to the franchise, one must scrutinize the school situation, job opportunities, the extension of library and recreational facilities, housing and public health programs, disparities among labor unions, and what is all too frequently overlooked, unequal penalties under the law. In other words there must be multiple approaches to the solution of the race problem in America.

Our abiding concern is the preservation of our American society through the strengthening of the public school system. The school remains the cornerstone of American life. School integration has been slow, and in many areas, merely token. Yet no objective student will fail to grant that the Supreme Court decision of 1954 is here to stay. There is still grave reason to fear that in many areas, this new pattern will not be accepted without ingenious interposition. Intransigents, in their massive resistance, will close schools rather than yield or surrender.

The cry of the hour is for better communication between Negro and White leadership. The integrity of each race should be maintained on the basis of mutual esteem. The dignity of each individual should be respected. We must realize that the cost of segregation is high. No economy can long afford the luxury of racial strife.

We commend those students who place life and limb in jeopardy for the sake of their convictions. Their objectives and methods, sit in, kneel-in, read-in, stand-in, wade-in, are consistent with our heritage, and in keeping with rights granted them by our Federal Constitution. Even when they practice civil disobedience at the risk of community discord, so long as they are non-violent, with "built-in" controls, they emulate the leadership of Dr. Martin Luther King, who proclaims: "I will obey the law only if the law is right and just, consistent with the moral law of the universe." Their impact upon the American public opinion and conscience cannot be overestimated.

The future of our nation depends upon the character, the vision, and the high principles of our people. Our emphasis upon brotherhood should not be limited to noble expressions and demonstrations one week during the year. Day after day, year after year, we must move forward to a nobler social order.

We hail the efforts of President Kennedy for his progressive sentiment in this area of national concern. We applaud his Committee on Government Contracts that would eliminate unwarranted discrimination. At the same time we urge the President to issue an Executive Order preventing segregation in Federal-financed housing. We commend the Interstate Commerce Commission, for terminating un-American practices in air and bus terminals. This all augurs well for the future.

In the final analysis, however, leadership cannot depend upon legislative fiat and intervention from Washington. Wherever man lives, he must essay the role of Hercules and clean out his own Augean stables. Bigotry dies, and love is born, in the hearts of men.

The following sentiment, from a poem by a contemporary American, James Weldon Johnson, breathes the spirit of promise. These words are not Negro words, any more than the Magna Carta is purely British, or the Declaration of Independence is only for Americans.

". . . sing a song full of the faith that the dark past has taught us,
Sing a song full of the hope that the present has brought us;
Facing the rising sun of our new day begun,
Let us march on till victory is won."

IMPORTANT INFORMATION ON UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

YOUR NUMBER Every person working in insured employment is provided with an insurance number which is yours for life. If you obtain a second or third number your records will be incomplete, and you may lose part or all of your benefit.

YOUR BOOK You must keep a safe and permanent record of your insurance number and take special care of your unemployment insurance book. Your book must be given to every employer when you start working and you must get it back from him when you stop working.

YOUR CLAIM Unemployment insurance benefits are paid only if you are genuinely unemployed through no fault of your own. You must be ready, willing and able to take suitable work at once. You must prove each one of these conditions in order to qualify for benefit.

If you are receiving benefits — and claim falsely, you are liable not only to loss of benefit but also to more severe penalties.

When in doubt, ask for advice at the nearest local office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

U. S. Secretary Of Commerce Stresses Need For Ethics In Business

U.S. Secretary of Commerce Luther H. Hodges emphasized that strict adherence to a code of high ethical practices by American business is an essential factor in that nation's effort to broaden its sphere of friendly countries. "Lax business practices endanger our relations with the uncommitted nations which seek proof that our system does work compassionately as well as profitably," Secretary Hodges said, "and leave us vulnerable to the Communist search 'for points of attack to shout to the world of the decadence of capitalism.'"

Addressing more than 500 Jewish leaders at the third annual convocation dinner of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America in Miami Beach, Secretary Hodges said: "We cannot delay in our task of attaining the highest ethical standards, for the whole of the free world looks to us for moral and economic leadership in fulfilling the promise of private enterprise."

Secretary Hodges had been honored by the Seminary earlier in the day at a special convocation at Temple Emanu-El, where Mr. Hodges was the recipient of The Seminary Medal for demonstrating that "the ethical and moral dimension in life is integral to the worlds of business, industry, and government." More than 1,000 educators, scholars, public officials and business leaders attended the ceremonies, at which the medal was conferred by Dr. Louis Finkelstein, chancellor of the Seminary.

Dr. Bernard Mandelbaum, provost of the Seminary, who had read the citation accompanying the medal conferred upon Mr. Hodges at the convocation, also spoke at the dinner and declared that "the attitude with which we face the present world situation will determine the victory or defeat of freedom over the forces of tyranny." In an obvious attack on the Birch Society, Dr. Mandelbaum said:

"There are those in our land who claim to be the sole defender of America's honor, but instead they besmirch our image with the poison of their hatred. In purporting to fight the evils of tyranny, they adopt the ways of the enemy with their character assassinations, use of the big lie and confusing slogans for truth.

"There are others, well-meaning, perhaps, who are, nevertheless, prophets of doom, voices of despair and hopelessness. These weak people, blind to increased moral might and spiritual strength, are the ready prey of wild, derisive voices of the fanatic bigots who can do more to destroy us from within than can the obvious enemy from without."

Dr. Mandelbaum urged general public adherence to an attitude which was expressed by President Kennedy when he emphasized, "'It is better to light a candle than to curse the darkness,' for such faith in the power of truth has passed the severest tests of human history."

Guests of honor at the dinner were six communal leaders who received the Seminary's National Community Service Award for "distinctive and continuing service to the community at large." They are: Samuel J. Halperin, of Miami Beach; Harry I. Hoffman, of Chicago; Phillip Leff, of New York; Bertram I. Loeb, of Ottawa, Ontario; Irving Maidman, of Upper Nyack (N. Y.) and Louis Stein, of Philadelphia.

Gabriel Heatter, noted newscaster, was dinner chairman, and Joseph S. Wohl, member of the Seminary's Board of Directors, presented the recipients for the award, which was conferred by Dr. Finkelstein. Dr. Joel S. Geffen, director of community education of the Seminary, delivered the invocation. Rabbi Stuart E. Rosenberg, of Beth Tzedec Synagogue, in Toronto, offered the closing prayer; and Rabbi Allen I. Rutchik, Southeast director of the United Synagogue of America, led in the grace after meals. Metropolitan Opera star, Jan Peerce, gave a song recital.

The Third Annual Samuel Friedland Lecture was delivered by Professor Moshe Greenberg, a member of the faculty of the University of Pennsylvania, whose topic was "The Biblical Grounding Of Human Values." Dr. Max Arzt, vice-chancellor of the Seminary and Professor of Practical Theology in its Rabbinical School, spoke on "The Union Of Vision With Action."

Mr. Hodges was sponsored for The Seminary Medal by Mrs. Maxwell Abbell, of Chicago, Illinois and Oscar Dane, of New York. He was presented by Benjamin J. Massell of Atlanta, Georgia. Charles Fruchtman, of Miami Beach, was marshal of the academic procession. Dr. Irving Lehrman, rabbi of Temple Emanu-El, delivered the opening prayer; and benediction was offered by Rabbi Mayer Abramowitz, of Temple Menorah, Miami Beach.

JEWISH FESTIVAL OF PURIM BEGINS AT SUNDOWN, MARCH 19

(Prepared by the Commission on Information on Judaism of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Central Conference of American Rabbis.)

A struggle to worship free from political oppression will be retold as Jews throughout the world observe the ancient Festival of Purim beginning at sundown, March 19, with the reading in synagogues of the Megillah, a scroll containing the biblical Book of Esther.

The story relates the struggle of the Jews in ancient Persia to free themselves from the ruthless prime minister, Haman. The holiday derives its name from the Hebrew word for "lots", referring to the manner in which Haman chose the day on which he intended to destroy the Jews.

The heroine of the narrative is Esther, Queen of King Ahasuerus, who, with the aid of her cousin, Mordecai, saved her people from destruction.

The festival lasts until sundown, March 20, and is celebrated with special religious services. The holiday is also marked with gift-giving, costume balls, carnivals, games, and playlets dramatizing the story.

Children derive special enjoyment from the religious service. They are provided with noise-makers during the reading of the Megillah, so that when the name of Haman is mentioned, they can stamp their feet and wave the noise-makers. A special taste-treat is "hamantaschen", a three-cornered pastry filled with "mohn" (poppy seeds), or prune jam, named after the Persian dictator.

A typical passage to be read during the service from the Union Prayerbook is:

"Grant us, we beseech Thee, the vision to see and the courage to do Thy holy will. Imbue our hearts with the fidelity of Mordecai and the devotion of Esther, that we may never swerve from the path of duty and loyalty trod by our fathers. Endow us with patience and strength, with purity of heart and unity of purpose, that we may continue to proclaim Thy law of love and truth to the peoples of the earth, until all men shall have learned to call Thee Father and know one another as brothers. Amen".
